FLEETING

Fleeting is an exhibition of paintings largely focused on time spent on the Hawkesbury River. The work continues an ongoing preoccupation John Morris has with landscape painting. He is concerned, not so much with whether the landscape is recognisable as a place, more about the perceived temperamental and emotional response to the landscape being experienced.

As shadows cast on rising morning mist, the Hawkesbury River has a strange and haunting beauty, which has drawn him back to engage with the landscape, over and over. Escarpments shadow the river, as does its history, both ancient and recent. The paintings are paired back, minimal, subtle works, which reveal themselves slowly. Horizons and shorelines alternate throughout the exhibition. Atmosphere, both as a natural phenomenon and an emotional response, fill the space created in each of his paintings.
